Percentage of the population citing health as their main concern before other issues, such as financial problems, housing or crime.