Adam Kamradt-Scott

Associate Professor, Government and International Relations, University of Sydney

Adam Kamradt-Scott specializes in global health security and international relations. His research and teaching explore how governments and multilateral organizations respond to adverse health events such as epidemics and pandemics, as well as emerging health and security challenges. Adam’s most recent research examines civil-military cooperation in health and humanitarian crises, and the correlations between gender, sexuality, health and security.

Adam’s professional background before entering academia includes having worked as a health professional, a political adviser, and public servant in national health security and pandemic planning. Prior to joining the Centre for International Security Studies in November 2011, Adam worked as a Research Fellow at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine on a 2.5 million Euro project that examined how different values, ideas, and beliefs shape global health policy. He currently serves on several editorial boards and has published three books and over 36 journal articles and book chapters on global health topics.
