Professor Linda Selvey

School of Public Health at The University of Queensland, Australia

Professor Selvey is a public health physician and public health researcher in the School of Public Health at The University of Queensland.

Linda Selvey has previously worked in senior positions within the Queensland Government, including as Executive Director of Population Health Queensland. Her research interests focus on communicable diseases prevention and control, particularly in relation to translation of research into practice. Her research is strongly informed by her experience in government and her short-term deployments with the Global Outbreak and Response Network led by the World Health Organization.
