Achieving Excellence in the Supply Chain Workforce: The People that Deliver Global Partnership
Reliable, well-performing supply chains are essential for assuring access to medicines and other health supplies, and thus for achieving positive health outcomes. The health supply chain workforce plays a vital role in the realization of global and country health goals, including the Millennium Development Goals for combating HIV/AIDS, malaria and other diseases, improving maternal health, and reducing child mortality. This satellite event will discuss the current state of human resources and supply chain management, and highlight the efforts of the People that Deliver global partnership, an initiative to promote workforce excellence in supply chain management, which is steered by USAID, the WHO, and the Reproductive Health Supplies Coalition.
